INCIDENT SITUATION

Nineteen people were injured and one was killed after a shooter opened fire at Dawson College in Montreal on September 13th. The suspect, Kimveer Gill, was dressed in a trench coat and armed with a semi-automatic carbine, a handgun, and a shotgun and began shooting at bystanders randomly outside the college. He took one person hostage and forced him to carry a bag with weapons and ammunition. Entering the college, Gill ordered students to the ground and made his way to the cafeteria while continuing to shoot. He was confronted by two police officers who wounded him in the arm. He eventually committed suicide with a self-inflicted gunshot wound. His body was dragged outside and covered with a tarp while police evacuated the school to search for more shooters.

Initial reports indicated that there were multiple shooters involved and up to four dead. However, it was later confirmed that Gill was the only shooter and he killed only one other person besides himself, an 18 year old female student. The Green Line was closed down for several hours during the incident. The Dawson College shooting is the fourth major school shooting in Montreal since the Ecole Polytechnique shooting in 1989.
